Questions Catholics ask

HOW DO I DISCERN A RELIGIOUS VOCATION?

Discerning a vocation can be like the old adage: A watched pot never boils. When I was trying to figure out how God was calling me, I felt as if I would never get to the point of knowing for sure that God was calling me, let alone exactly to what that call was. I had some helps along the way, and though I felt as if I were getting nowhere, I realized later that the more I consciously tended to God and sorted through my life, the more I was growing into my calling. All of a sudden, so it seemed, the pot was boiling.

The process was both an active one and one of simply living life. I realized that I wanted my life to be more oriented around God. The first step for me was to be more faithful to prayer. That meant praying each day and also learning about different ways to pray. I also began seeing a spiritual director, someone who could walk with me on my spiritual journey and help me to see the ways God was moving in my life. I began reading more of the saints and also, when I was finally willing to admit I might be attracted to religious life, getting to know sisters around me.

I also kept living my life. While the discernment part of things was a real struggle for me, I was free in my "normal" life to just be. Over time I began to feel shifts within my own self, shifts toward feeling more like myself, feeling more alive than ever. By being intentional about my discernment and also integrating it with my everyday life, I found that I had already been living into the calling that God was nudging me toward.

—Sister Julie Vieira, I.H.M.
